Italy's Easter Traditions

As in most formerly Catholic countries, Easter in Italy is a sacred season, accompanied by several traditions and cultural customs. Easter Sunday remains a special family time, and even those families that do not attend Easter services still get together for family dinners. For those that attend Mass, new clothes in the latest spring fashions are often the norm.

This most holy week begins for many Christians on Palm Sunday, where church worshippers receive palm fronds at Mass. Traditionally, many of the people who receive palm weave the fronds into crosses to wear, or to place on the graves of their departed loved ones. A visit to cemetery is traditional, and purchased palm ornaments, or spring flowers, are also used to decorate the graves.

On Good Friday, the day that Christ was crucified, many communities in Italy, from large cities to tiny villages, remember the day with Passion processions. In some places, the Cross is carried, in others, people reenact the Stations of the Cross. In Rome, the Pope himself, his health allowing, leads a procession that begins at the Coliseum.

All of these religious events lead up to the celebration of the Resurrection with High Mass and family gatherings on Easter Sunday. Among the dishes that are featured on the Pasqua table are lamb and special stuffed or layered pasta dishes such as lasagna and manicotti. Special pastries are served, and many, many people purchase the large, foil covered eggs filled with a tiny surprise.

Easter Monday is a work holiday for large numbers of people, and in warmer climes, a picnic marks the day

Italian Coffee

The Art of Drinking Espresso

Espresso, caffè normale, cappuccino; sometimes it seems that there are as many types of coffee in Italy as there are pastas. And just like pasta, Italian coffee is an art form with many customs and traditions. Whether it's a caffè corretto thrown back like a shot, a cappuccino and brioche for breakfast, or a granita di caffè con panna to cool off from the hot midday sun, in Italy there is a coffee drink specific for every time and mood.

The Perfect Tazza

Want to start a heated discussion in Italy? Ask a group of friends how to make a perfect cup of stove top espresso! There are fully automatic espresso makers, pump driven espresso machines, lever piston espresso machines, and, of course, the classic aluminum espresso coffee maker (also called a moka pot or The Moka Express), which was invented in the 1930's.

Italian coffee tifosi in search of the perfect cup will also debate various factors such as bean type, blade vs. burr grinders, tamp pressure, water temperature, and humidity. Caffeine junkies not only have their favorite local torrefazione (coffee house), but even prefer certain baristi because of their ability to deliver a perfect caffè espresso.

'S' Marks the Pot (of Coffee)

No one expects a first-time visitor to Italy to trill their r's like a native Italian speaker. But if you don't want to be labeled maleducato, when ordering a coffee in Italy it's espresso, not expresso. Both will quicken your heart rate, but an expresso is a fast train and an espresso is a small cup of very strong coffee. And caffè (with two f's) is both the beverage and the locale that serves it.

What kind of coffee should you order in a caffè? The possibilities can be as daunting as a Starbucks menu. Below is a list of the most popular caffeine-laden drinks. Keep in mind too, Italians generally don't drink coffee with any meal except breakfast. Coffee is often ordered after a meal, and—che vergogna!—only the unwitting tourist will order a cappuccino in a restaurant after lunch or dinner. When ordering an after-dinner coffee, do not ask for an espresso, ask for "un caffè, per favore."

Italian Coffee Vocabulary List

- caffè (espresso)—a small cup of very strong coffee, i.e., espresso
- caffè Americano—American-style coffee, but stronger; weaker than espresso and served in a large cup
- caffè corretto—coffee "corrected" with a shot of grappa, cognac, or other spirit
- caffè doppio—double espresso
- caffè freddo—iced coffee
- caffè Hag—decaffeinated coffee
- caffè latte—hot milk mixed with coffee and served in a glass for breakfast
- caffè macchiato—espresso "stained" with a drop of steamed milk: small version of a cappuccino
- caffè marocchino—espresso with a dash of hot milk and cacao powder
- caffè stretto—espresso with less water; rocket fuel!
- cappuccino—espresso infused with steamed milk and drunk in the morning, but never after lunch or dinner
- granita di caffè con panna—frozen, iced beverage (similar to a slush, but ice shavings make it authentic) and topped with whipped cream

Basic Sweet Dough

- 1 cup lukewarm milk (scalded, then cooled)
- 1/2 cup sugar
- 1 teaspoon salt
- 2 tablespoons yeast (cake or granules)
- 2 eggs
- 1/2 cup soft butter
- 4 1/2 cups flour

In a large bowl mix milk, sugar, and salt together. Add yeast. Stir gently until the yeast is dissolved. Stir in eggs, butter, and flour. Knead this mixture in a mixer fitted with a dough hook until it's soft, smooth, and no longer sticky. Add another 1/2 cup flour if necessary to reach desired texture. Or mix by hand, using a spoon to mix initially, then turn the contents out onto a floured surface and knead with even strokes until smooth.

Place dough into a large bowl that has been well-buttered on all sides. Turn the dough once so the top surface is coated. Place a film of plastic wrap over the top, and allow dough to rest in a warm place until doubled in bulk. When doubled (after about one hour), gently punch the dough back down to its original size. Place the wrap securely over the top, and allow the rising process to repeat. After dough doubles in its second rising, punch it down again.

Use this dough to make the following recipe.

Italian Anise Easter Bread

The three strands of dough in this braided bread are symbolic of the Trinity. Anise extract gives this bread its unique flavor and can be found in health food stores or the spice and flavoring section in most grocery stores.

- Basic sweet dough
- 1 tablespoon pure anise extract
- 1 egg, well beaten
- 1 tablespoon anise seeds

Follow the recipe for basic sweet dough. When mixing the ingredients together, stir in anise extract. After the second rising, divide the dough into six equal parts by rolling the dough into a large, even rectangle, roughly 16 by 24 inches, then slicing it with a sharp knife. With each group of three strands, gently fold the pieces into an even braid. Tuck the strands under the loaf for a neater finish. Place the resulting two braids on a well-greased cookie sheet and allow to rise. Brush the tops with the beaten egg. Sprinkle the tops of each braid with anise seeds. Bake the braids in a 325-degree oven until well-browned. These loaves will be shiny and beautiful. This bread is best eaten while warm.

Baseball in Italy started at the end of WWII, in 1945, when American troops came to Italy to help get rid of the Nazis. Though known by most as the site of a great WWII battle, the American cemetery in Anzio is also the birth place of baseball in Italy. American soldiers would recruit local youths to aid in the burial details and then teach them to play baseball on their breaks. They taught Italian kids how to play the game, played some in front of Italian people, and the seed was sown. The first Italian League Tournament was held in 1948, and Bologna won it. Teams with a good tradition for baseball are in the following towns: Nettuno, Bologna, Parma, Milan, Rimini and Grosseto.

Who are the Italian-American baseball players who hit 40 or more homers in a single season?

Roy Campanella (1953)
Jimmy Gentile (1961)
Rocky Colavito (1958, 1959, 1961)
Joe DiMaggio (1937)
Rico Petrocelli (1969)
Mike Piazza (1997, 1999)

Is There Baseball In Heaven?

Two old men had been best friends for years, and they both live to their early 90's, when one of them suddenly falls deathly ill. His friend comes to visit him on his deathbed, and they're reminiscing about their long friendship, when the dying man's friend asks, "Listen, when you die, do me a favor. I want to know if there's baseball in heaven."

The dying man said, "We've been friends for years, this I'll do for you." And then he dies.

A couple days later, his surviving friend is sleeping when he hears his friend's voice. The voice says, "I've got some good news and some bad news. The good news is that there's baseball in heaven."

"What's the bad news?"

"You're pitching on Wednesday."
